LOCAL BUILDER LAUNCHES GREEN BUILDING CHALLENGE

East Providence, RI (July 25, 2008)—Parker Thompson, the general contracting and construction management firm, has launched an internal green building challenge to educate employees about new green building products, methods and techniques.

This spring a company analysis culled that employees were interested in continued education about the building industry and specifically about green technologies. The executive team responded with a challenge for all employees—interested personnel would be spilt into teams and asked to present a proposed green home. Of the five proposed projects, one will be chosen to be built in the Great Woods neighborhood of East Greenwich.

The challenge has sparked a competitive atmosphere in the office while each team works on their plan of action, including site selection for the residence, design schematics, preliminary drawings and specifications as well as a proposed construction schedule. The teams will be competing for best overall design.

By fall a winning green project will be selected and construction on the green residence will begin before the end of 2008.
